... [she] doubted [not] of gifts in this spacious ground. She then found there ready protection from the great Lord when she had [the] greatest need, [the] favor of the highest Judge, that he defended her against the highest danger, creation's Ruler. Father in heaven provided her [a] glorious favor, because she had strong belief always in the Almighty. I have heard that Holofernes then made an invitation to wine and served up a magnificent banquet with all wondrous things. The lord of men commanded all the most senior thegns to it. That they with great haste, accomplished sheild-warriors, came proceeding to the powerful lord, leader of the people. That was on the fourth day on which Judith, clear-sighted in thought, enchantingly beautiful lady, first sought him out.
They then to the feast always went to sit boastful in wine-drining all his companions in woe, bold mailed warrior. There were deep cups borne constantly along benches, likewise goblets and pitchers filled to guests. They that, doomed to die, consumed, renowned sheild-warriors, yet [from] this the ruler did not turn away dreadful lord of warriors. Then arose Holofernes,

[1] in ðȳs ġinnan grunde — "ðȳs" is an instrumental demonstrative pronoun, which implies that "ġinnan grunde" is also instrumental, but now I don't know how to translate this with the preceding "in" – "in by means of this spacious ground", or "in with this ..." sounds funny

[2] ðæs — þæs does not modify Fæder; it modifies "þe hēo āhte trumne .... ælmihtigan." þæs is a genitive article, so having it modify Fæder removes Fæder as a subject.

[3] eallum wundrum — Isaac called this the "instrumental dative", but when I asked is this the "Dative Rule" he said yes, for the most part. It's just that "with" is the most common preposition, and that does make it like the instrumental.

[4] cōmon tō ðām rīċan þēodne fēran — Verb of motion plus infinitive: "came proceeding; made their way"

[5] þæs ðe — "from that then", "after". Cambridge calls this a "gen. phrase of specification"

[6] ides — this is not just a normal word for a woman. It shows up always to distinguish a woman as special (the safest gloss is "supernatural lady"). Nearly only used in poetry. Potenitally from PIE "fire, flame, burning". According to Grimm, cognate with dís, a Norse female diety, ghost or spirit associated with Fate who can be either benevolent or antagonistic toward mortals (though heavenly debated).

[7] byrnwiġġende — "byrn" here means mail, and survives in Scots as byrnie "armor"

[8] swylċe ēac — when you see "swilċe ēac", translate this as "likewise" gold-friend of men, in merriness of wine-pouring, [he] laughed and roared, resounded and made a din, that children of men might have been able to hear from afar how the resoloute [man] stormed and yelled spirited and mead-mad, insisted repeatedly to the guests that they enjoyed themselves well.

So the villian throughout each day made his warriors drunk with wine, arrogant giver of treasure, until they lay in stupor drunk, all his company as if they were struck dead, drained of any mental faculties. So the leader of men commanded [that] the guests to be attended to until the dark of night drew near the chlidren of men. [He] commanded then, suffused with malice, the blessed maiden to be fetched to his bed, [she] most frequently loaded with treasure, adorned with rings. They quickly helped, they his servants, as their master commanded them, lord of mailed warriors, [and] went in an instant to the guest-house where they found wise Judith, and then, promptly, began to lead [her] to the shield-warrior, the beautiful maiden, to the despised tent where the ruler always rested himself inside at night, hateful to the Savior, Holofernes. There was a beautiful all-golden fly-net hung about the general's bed so that the evil [one] could gaze through, lord of warriors, on each [one] who came therein, [9] stīðmōda styrmde — "st" can only alliterate with other "st" words, so "se" does not in this case allterate.

[10] gōda ġehwylċes — note the stacked genitive here "gōda ġehwylċes" modifying āgotene [11] þā ēadigan mæġð — Cambridge says that "mæġð" here is accusative singular, but we have the "þā" is either a plural accusative article, or an adverb meaning "then/when". "ēadigan" is weak, so it must be the article, but now we have a number mismatch. We only know of one maiden so far, Judith, so it seems like it can't be "the happy maidens", so what to do with the þā. Is it plural in inflexion but singular in meaning?
[12] anbyhtscealcas — ambyht – this was brought in from Norwegian later, and means "of the office". It is from this + mann, we get the modern english term "ombudsman" – the man of the office. "scealc" is a very interesting word: it means "servant, term of reproach (since to be a servant is not honorable); a man, soldier, sailor". Now think of the word Marshall: this is mære (mare) and scealc (warrior) so "mare-warrior" or leader of calvalry. Now think of the Marshall of France from Henry V, the leader of cavalry!
[13] bealofulla — baleful?
[14] þæt se bealofulla mihte wlītan þurh — Isaac calls this an "intent clause", it qualifies what the previous clause described.

of the children of men, and onto him none of the human race, unless the arrogant one with renowned malice, could have ordered one of warriors for the sake of secret council. They then quckly brought the wise woman into the bed; then [the] determined warriors of their lord went to inform [him] that the saintly woman was brought into his bower tent. Then the renowned in resolution, pleased lord of fortresses, thought then to besmirch that beautiful woman with filth and with sin. The Judge of Heaven did not want to assent to that, Shepherd of glory, but He prevented him from that thing, the Lord, Sovereign of hosts. Then the evil, licentious, diablolical [lord] departed ... with a a host of men, to go to his bed, where he was to have his evil spirit destroyed forthwith within one night. Then awaited his unpleasant end on earth, such [an end] as he had previously worked towards, cruel ruler of men, while he in this world remained under the roof of the heavens. The powerful [one] fell then, drunk with wine, in the middle of his bed, just as his senses left him. [The] warriors went out of the dwelling with much haste, men satiated with wine, they who led the troth-breaker, hateful tyrant, to bed [for the] last time. Then was the handmaiden of the Saviour filled with glory, keenly mindful of how she could most easily deprive the monstrous [one]

[15] þe nēar — since in this case þe is not the relative pronoun particle, but instead an instrumental article (although normally we would see this as þȳ), this makes "þe nēar" into an instrumental phrase: "for the sake of" essentially

[16] wīdle ond mid womme besmītan . Ne wolde þæt wuldres Dēma ġeðafian — This is a line that is longer than it is supposed to be according to the rules of OE poetry. It is "hypermetric". Also, this line breaks the rule that there should be no more than three alliterations in a line; this has four.

[17] rīċa — this is an adjective used as a noun here, so we put a [one] after it – "the powerful one"

[18] Nerġendes — nerġend [19] atolan — another adjective used as a noun, so we tack on [one] to it to make it more noun like: "monstrous [one]"

[20] scūrum heardne — Isaac says that this is debatable that it means "hardened by battle" – it could easily mean "hardened by the forge"

[21] Ongan — Cambridge says "Ongan" should be past indicative 1st person singular, but oldenglishaerobics.net says it is 3rd person. The word is spelled the same in both Cambridge and oldenglishaerobics.net, and 3rd person makes more sense, so what gives?

of life before the unclean, sinful [one] would awaken. Then the maiden of the Creator with braided hair, sharp sword, hardened with battles, and from [the] sheath drew [it] with [her] right hand. [She] then began to name the Guardian of Heaven, Saviour of all of the dwellers in the world by name, and then said that word:

"I desire to ask of you, God of beginnings and Spirit of consolation, Son of the Almighty, splendor of the Trinity, for your mercy for me in my time of need. [My] mind is now violently inflamed in me and [my] heart sad, deeply afflicted with sorrows. Give me, Lord of Heaven, victory and true faith, so that with this sword I may kill this lord of murders. Give me my salvation, stern Lord of men. Never have I had a greater need of your mercy. Avenge now, mighty Lord, noble-minded Giver of glory, that which is thus so bitterly in my heart, searingly in my breast." They, the highest Judge, inspired [her] then quickly with strength, as He does [for] everyone of those who dwell on earth, who seeks him as [a] help for himself with reason and with correct faith. Then hope became renewed abundantly in her spirit, in the holy [woman]. [She] then seized the heathen man firmly by his hair, [and] with her hands [she] pulled him toward herself contemptuously and skillfully placed the evil [one], [the] hateful man, so that she could most easily control the wretched man well. The woman with braided locks then struck the enemy who does harm with gleaming sword, hostile-minded, so that she half cut through [22] ðē frymða God ond frōfre Gæst Bearn Alwaldan — Note here that we have þē (singular dative) [23] mē — Isaac says this is the ethical dative – the dative of reference. "For someone's benefit or to someone's detriment." [24] mē ys þus torne on mōde — The mē here is the dative of body parts, which is why we turn it from "me" to "my" in "so bitterly in my heart".

leaders of [our] people, gaze upon this hateful, heathen warrior's head, of Holofernus not living, who of all men commited against us the greatest number of violent acts, painful sorrow, and that still more [he] would have wanted to increase; but God did not grant him longer of life, because he might trouble us with malice. I forced him out of life by means of God's help. Now I want to ask each of the men of the townspeople, of the shield warriors, that you quickly should hasten yourselves to battle after creation's God, merciful King, sends from the east [a] bright light. Bear shields forth, sheilds before breast and corslets, shining helms into the throngs of enemies.

[31] gumena ġehwæne — gumena is genitive because of ġehwæne – partitive genitive [32] gumena ġehwæne þyssa burglēoda — gumena ... burglēoda == stacked genitives [33] fȳsan — fȳsan here looks like an infinitive, but note there is no conjugated helper verb. Griffith (A Guide to Old English) says this is actually the present subjuctive plural which does work, with e -> a as a dialect or scribal choice [34] línde — lind comes from lindenwood, which is a strong, light wood that does not splinter (tight grain) and carves well [35] cēnra — the reason that the "c" cēnra here is not palatalized is because in proto-Germanic (aka Teutonic) the word was cōn (a back vowel) and the palatalization happened (universally?) the speakers did not palatalize the c (since it was followed by a back vowel); thereafter we had ō -> ē but it was too late to palatalize the c [36] siġeþūfas — þūfa here is from latin "tufa" meaining "banner", and the fact that we have t -> þ means this was assimilated early in OE.
[37] se hlanca — "the lean [one]" refers to "wulf", so "wulf in walde [wolf in the forest]" is in apposition with this?

Throw down the leaders of their people swords stained, has shown you by means of my hand." Then the army of bold and brave [men] quickly became prepared for battle.

men and retainers, bore victory banners, went forth to battle in a straight line [aka directly] men under helmets of the holy city into the dawn itself. Shields resounded, clashed loudly. This the lean [one] rejoiced,

[the] wolf in [the] forest and the dark raven, [a] bird greedy for slaughter; both knew that the men of the nation intended to provide a feast to them in [those] about to die. But an eagle flew along the track eager for food from them, dewy-feathered dark-coated sang [a] war-song horny-beaked. The warriors went, warriors to battle, protected by sheilds by concave shields, they who a while before suffered disgrace by the hostile [ones], contempt of the heathens. That was painfully, at the battle, repayed to them all, the Assirians, after the Hebrews, under battle flags, had arrived at the battle encampment. They then boldly caused [the Assyrians] to flee hence, showers of arrows, battle serpents from curved bows, firmly placed arrows. The angry warriors rage loudly, sent spears

[38] stedehearde — stedehearde is obscured in the actual manuscript and there is quite a lot of debate about what this word should be. stede == ON "anvil" but Isaac says – why would the author borrow from ON when there's a perfectly good word in OE for anvil: "anfilt" (from which we get anvil, of course). So Issac suggests this should be translated as "firmly placed" (stede == place, spot, heard == firm, hard)

[39] ealle þrāge — This is in the accusative because it is the "accusative of time"

[40] iċ — Who is "Iċ" here? We have not been in dialogue, so it is not Judith. The narrator, who was apparently there at the battle of the Assyrian camp? oldenglishaerobics.net says that this construction is used in poetry by the writer at "narrative transitions".

[41] hilde — note that this "hild" is feminine; when used as a feminine noun, it means "battle" and is typically only used in poetry. There is a masculine "hild" also that means: "watchful care, safe keeping; preservation, safety".
[42] him wiht ne spēow — lit. [it] succeded [for] them not at all [43] sum tō ðām arod — lit. one to the bold [44] Funde — Hasenfratz and Jambeck say class 3 strong verbs should have this vowel progression: i (inf) a (past 3 sing.) u (past pl.) u (past pt.), which makes past 3 sing of findan be "fand", but here it is "funde", on which both Cambridge and oldenglishaerobics.net agree. Should it not be past subj sing, which follows past plural, so funde? In West Saxon, however, this verb was regularlized through analogy with the past subjunctive "funde", so the past 3rd person indicative singular in West Saxon only becomes "funde". Stupid West Saxons.
[45] līfes belidenne — belidenne is a past participle used as an adjective. The past participle of beliþan is beliden, +ne for masc acc sing

[46] Hēr ys ġeswutelod — I've been observing that "y" is very prevalent in this text. I asked Issac about "ys" here and he confirmed that in West Saxon this is a common substitution for "i", so "is" == "ys" here.

[47] ġewitan — note that this should be either a past plural (ġewiton) or a past participle with wurpon (ġewiten), yet the spelling is ġewitan which looks like an infinitive. Issac says that this is a dialect or scribal choice. The other thing Issac said is that in OE "o" and "a" are often interchangable. I suppose that is because they are both back vowels?

[48] flēam sceacan — translated literally this is "fled into flight" or "flew into flight", so a tautological doublet. I chose "depart" for this reason, because in ModE, "flew into flight" just sounds odd.

[49] Lȳthwōn — And oldenglishaerobics.net says this is an adverb acting as a pronoun. So this is the subject. Also "cwicera" is genitive because this since lȳthwōn means "few" this is the partitive genitive

"Here is revealed our own ruin, of birds greedy for slaughter. Those who remained fled, the shield-bearing army of the hateful ones. The army of the Hebrews proceeded on the track after them adorned by victory, glorified by might; the Lord God fairly undertook to help them, the almighty Lord.

They then boldly, with swords adorned, brave-hearted warriors, made a war-path through the throng of hateful ones, hacked on shield, broke the shield-wall. Spear-throwers were at the time the noblemen keenly desired of the loathsome people. Few came [back] warriors went onto the return path, in the midst of the carnage, reeking corpses. An opportunity existed for the natives to take from among the most hateful, their ancient enemies, not living,

[50] rēadum golde — Gold is frequently described as "red" in medieval English texts. Many color words have changed their meanings since Old English and Middle English times, their semantic boundaries moving on the color spectrum.
[51] sundoryrfes — sundor is our source for "asunder" aka apart, thus private [52] Ealles ðæs — Cambridge and Mitchell & Robnson both say this should be translated as "For all that", but that doesn't seem to fit the tone of what is being said and done in this fit. This sentence seems to be about Judith telling God "look at all we accomplished via your guidance and glory, Lord" and then describing the rewards _she_ gets afterwards for having faith.

those who were, while alive, the most loathsome of living people to them. Then all of the nation, greatest of all tribes, for one month proud, with braided locks, carried and brought to the bright city, Bethulia, helms and short swords, gray corslets, battle-equipment of men adorned with gold, more excellent of treasures than any shrewd one can tell.

330 Everything the men of the nation conquered in force, brave under military banners in battle because of Judith's wise advice, brave maiden. They as reward to her brought from the journey, 335 noblemen spear-brave, Holofernes' sword and sweaty helm, in addition to a large corslet ornamented by red gold; and all that the arrogant lord of warriors had of treasure or of private inheritance, of rings and of bright precious things, they delivered that to 340 the bright, quick witted woman. For all that, Judith related to the Lord of hosts, whose glory gave to her honor on the kindom of earth, also in addition to reward in the heavens, fame in the kindom of earth, because she had true belief in the Almighty God; indeed in the end [she] doubted not 345 of the rewards that she long yearned for. May there be glory of eternity from the beloved Lord, who made wind and air, heavens and spacious lands, in addition to the raging sea and joys of heaven, on account of his own mercy.

About this text

In a treatise on the books of the Old and New Testaments, written probably in the late 900s, at a time when Viking attacks on eastern and southern England were intesifying, abbot Ælfric exploited a reference to the Book of Judith to make a rare comment on events outside the monastery. He explained that he had put Judith's story into English (in a homiletic paraphrase) "as an example to you people, so that you may defend your country with weapons against the threatening host". Judith was a pious widow who saved her people, the Israelites (called Hebrews in our poem) from destruction at the hands of the Assyrians by allowing herself to be taken into the bedroom of Holofernes, the enemy general laying siege to their city of Bethulia, and then chopping of his head.

There is no evidence that the version of Judith's story created by an anonymous OE poet was written with the specific purpose of encouraging the English in their own conflicts with invaders. It has come down to us in the early eleventh-century Beowulf manuscript, copied out by one of that poem's two scribes and bound into the volume immediately after it.

Skillfully paring down the biblical narrative to is essentials [...], the poet has produced a moral tale for all times, but it is distinctly coloured by the conventionl diction and imagery of Germanic heroism and structured by the sort of polarisation of good and evil well known in saint's lives.

In the Book of Judith, the Israelite wido dresses up and presents herself enticingly to Holofernes at a feast, but in the poem she is a young virgin whose role in the would-be seduction is entirely passive.
